I'm excited to share my first issue as HFV editor. This month it's all about fresh starts. Our cover star Millie Mackintosh has certainly had something of a reinvention, now a successful businesswoman at the helm of her own fashion label, she's found her true passion in work and love. We catch-up with Johnny Coca, the designer responsible for reinventing Mulberry, and chat about how he's winning bag fans back and re-booting the Bayswater. When it comes to beauty, our backstage trends special will inspire you to rethink your look and give your skin a serious spring glow. Our aim is to always bring you the freshest edit of fashion and beauty, new ideas and practical style tips. Let us know what you think!

Mulrone, FROW favourite Olivia Palermo and tennis ace Serena Williams). The Bahrain-born, British-raised, NY-based fashion designer is responsible for the sell-out white 'husband' shirt Meghan wore with ripped Mother Denim jeans, when she accompanied Britain's most eligible bachelor to the Invictus Games in Toronto – the couple's first official outing.

The outfit was just one example of her casual preppy look, which favours basic shirts, tees and luxury knitwear, as well as classic tailoring in natural monochromatic and tonal colour palettes.

Misha, who some anticipate will design the bride's wedding dress (although our money is on Erdem, Ralph & Russo or Roland Mouret), is also rumoured to be the link between the newly engaged pair. Her ex-husband, Old Etonian Alexander Gilkes, is a close friend of Princess Eugenie who has a history of stepping in to play matchmaker for her older cousin Harry.

British designer Kate Halfpenny of bridalwear brand Halfpenny London predicts Meghan will wear something simple when she and Prince

Harry tie the knot in May. "The lace detail will be in the veil. I think a wide boat-neck, off-the-shoulder neckline would frame her beautiful face and show off her collarbones," says the designer, who creates wedding gowns for front-row regulars and has dressed Kate Moss and Rihanna. "She could have a huge detachable train so it turns into more of a slinky dress for the evening," she adds.
