MALESTIC SHADE

Indian saree remains the traditional clothing of Indian women. Worn in varied styles, it is a long piece of flat cotton, silk or other fabric woven in different textures with different patterns. The saree has a border where some it is an art or tailored for a specific occasion. This graceful Indian attire has also been in several ways and instances of weaving as well as its color and texture are indicative of the status, age, occupation, region and religion of a woman.

F A BLOOM N

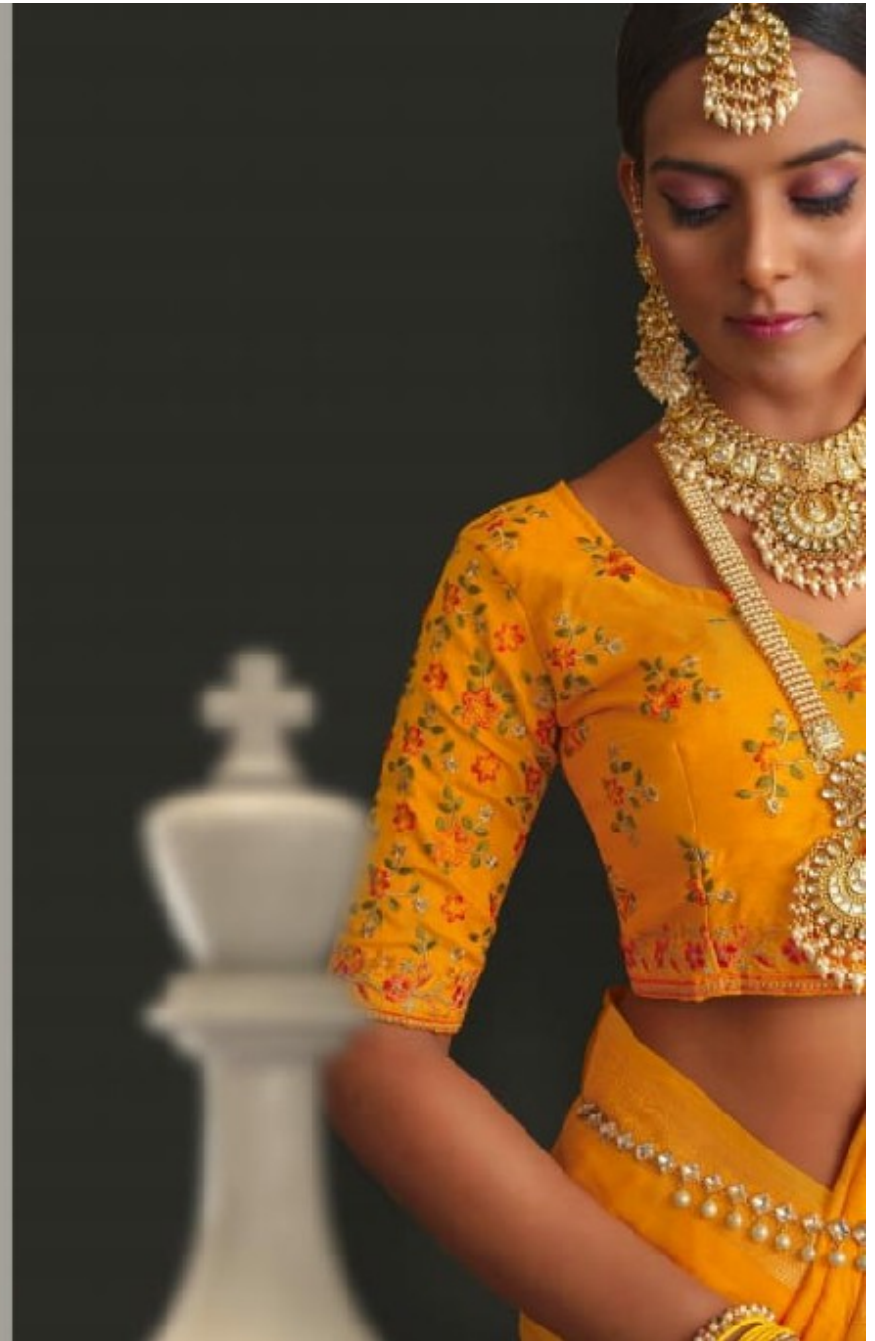

Indian sarees retain the traditional draping of Indian women. When created, they are a long piece of fabric, with or without borders, in different textures with different patterns. The saree has a lasting charm since it is not cut or tailored to a particular size. This graceful femininity can also be worn in several ways and its moment of wearing as well as its colour and texture are indicators of the wearer's age, occupation, region and religion or a mixture.
